Excerpt from The Deeper Mysteries

Far from subscribing to the theory that matter is but the three-dimensional aspect of spirit, the author holds that both spirit and matter, each in some crude condition, existed as positive and negative before time began, and, because naturally the more active, spirit has progressed enormously, though not necessarily to perfection, during unnumbered æons. On the other hand, matter, that form of electrical energy with which, on this lowly planet, man is most familiar, has reached only the condition now obtaining in our solar system and beyond it.

Furthermore, the author holds that matter shall be refined to a state of permanency as such. No doubt this matter will be quite unlike any substance which man at present has knowledge of, and perhaps its permanence will not be attained until the Universe in toto has evolved to a definite degree, or even to the utmost.

The resurrected body of Jesus was the first recorded hint of the possibilities inherent in matter; but, we contend, that body was only the notable beginning of a condition both of mankind and the World itself, - a condition depicted by the Revelator who saw: "the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of Heaven." To John, this condition was an earthly one wherein "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."
