Lucy is a young mother who died tragically in a car crash, leaving two young daughters and a husband behind. After a few days in heaven, concerned about the unfinished things she had left behind, she begged God to let her return for just a short time to tend to these few very things she had left undone. After warning her that many changes had occurred in her absence, God, against his better judgment, finally agrees to let her go. But he put several stipulations on her visit. Two stipulations were that she could not tell anyone who she was and she must stay for five years. Happily, Lucy agreed to everything and returned to find she had been gone thirty years, not the two or three days she had thought. Many radical changes had occurred in her absence, the least of which was her husband was now an old man with another wife.
